

【Shenzhen】Lianhuashan Park

A visual feast of ceiba & bald cypress!

The vibrant colours of Shenzhen remain undiminished despite the chill in autumn and winter. With their most dazzling hues as a winter exclusive, the ceiba trees and russet bald cypress are transforming the city into a more breathtaking spectacle. From November to early December, the southern entrance of Lianhuashan Park, located in the heart of Shenzhen, comes alive with a spectacular display of blooming ceiba trees.

With their large and dense flowers, these eye-catching pink blossoms transform the park into a romantic paradise against the backdrop of crisp autumn air and clear blue skies. The petals fall gracefully whenever a gentle breeze sweeps through, creating a warm and tender atmosphere that draws crowds of locals and tourists to admire the blossoms and capture the moment.

As December and January arrive, Lianhuashan Park features the autumn foliage of tall bald cypress trees, characterised by their reddish-brown bark adorned with feathery leaves. As this period also marks their seasonal change, the green, yellow, and red leaves complement one another beautifully. Together with their copper-red trunks, they resemble a living masterpiece. As you stroll along the park's winding paths, you'll be captivated by the vivid colours of red leaves standing in stark contrast with the surrounding lush greenery. Gazing at the reflection of the bald cypress in the mirror-like lakes from afar, you'll find yourself embraced by the tranquillity of nature's masterpiece. More than just a chance to admire the amazing blossoms, a visit to Lianhuashan Park in autumn and winter offers the perfect setting for picnicking, kite flying, and taking in panoramic views. It's an ideal spot for relaxation, leisure and connecting with nature!
